Description. This volume contains a representative selection of talks and writings by Martha Harris and Donald Meltzer on the key developmental phase of adolescence, from their teachings both separately and together over many years. Their psychological penetration into this phase or condition transcends changes in culture and environment, focussing on the 'community of adolescents' as a state of mind struggling with confusion manifest not only in sexuality but in all aspects of life.

Although much of the material in this book has been published before, it seemed useful to collect in one volume these various talks and writings on the key developmental phase of adolescence by Harris and Meltzer, who taught both separately and together over many years. Similar books have existed for some time in Italian and Spanish, but not until now in English, and I am grateful to Romana Negri and Miriam Botbol for encouraging the idea of this collection.
