About this breed Edward Laverack is credited with the foundation stock of the modern English Setter. In 1825, he bought his first two Setters, both of them blue belton in colour, from an estate where they had been carefully bred for about 35 years. From these two, Laverack set about establishing type by a programme of selective breeding.

There are two distinct types of English Setter. The original field/hunting type (sometimes called the "Llewellyn Setter") is smaller, with a broader, natural-looking head and much less hair. These dogs have strong hunting instincts and need vigorous exercise. The "bench" or "show" type of English Setter is quite tall, with a long narrow head and a profusion of silky hair that needs plenty of brushing and trimming.
