Last week, Straight Answers addressed the issue of just war theory. While the criteria for waging a just war are reasonable, our modern methods of warfare complicate their application, especially in the areas of proportionality (that the good achieved by waging war must not be outweighed by the harm), discrimination (that armed forces ought to fight armed forces and strive not to bring harm to noncombatants), and due proportion (that combatants use only those means necessary to achieve their ...

~~BBC Religions Christianity: War~~

Just war theory is a doctrine, also referred to as a tradition, of military ethics studied by military leaders, theologians, ethicists and policy makers. The purpose of the doctrine is to ensure war is morally justifiable through a series of criteria, all of which must be met for a war to be considered just. The criteria are split into two groups: "right to go to war" and "right conduct in war". The first concerns the morality of going to war, and the second the moral conduct within war. Recentl

This is a far cry from Christian thought. As St. Augustine says: "A just war is that which punishes injustice"; those attacked deserve the attack and consequent punishment due to their own fault. Causes for war are endless: human imperfection, insufficient reasoning, ambition, low personal, public, and international morality...Whatever the cause may be, one must be able to say that a fault has been committed; moreover, it must be a fault against justice.
